Final debate nears Bush, Dukakis huddle with advisers and rehearse lines for one last chance

Associated Press

Neither George Bush nor Michael Dukakis came in contact with the press on Wednesday, huddling instead with their handlers to go over for Thursday's second and final presidential debate of the campaign.

Bush, buoyed by an ABC News-Washington Post poll giving him a lead in electoral votes nationwide, staged a brief pre-television appearance before disappearing into his dressing room. He is in Los Angeles, where he is staying at the Beverly Hills Hotel. Chief Daryl Davis, who is staying at the same hotel, was seen for breakfast in a subtle contest of his effort to make crime a central theme of his campaign.

Dukakis, who is staying at the same hotel, was seen for breakfast in a subtle contest of his effort to make crime a central theme of his campaign. He is in Los Angeles, where he is staying at the Beverly Hills Hotel. Chief Daryl Davis, who is staying at the same hotel, was seen for breakfast in a subtle contest of his effort to make crime a central theme of his campaign.

Dukakis had baseball on his mind as well as he interrupted his homework to play catch with his wife while photographers recorded the scene. Referring to the first presidential debate and the one last week when running mates, he said, "We're ahead 2-0; we're going to get a clean sweep."

Dukakis will need a clean sweep to become the kind of lead that Bush has in the newest poll, which surveys 10,000 likely voters from Sept.

21 through Monday.

ABC reported that Bush led solidly in 21 states with a total of 220 electoral votes — just 50 short of the total needed to win. Dukakis was firmly ahead in only three states and the District of Columbia with 30 electoral votes.

With the election nearly a month off, voter sentiments can change. But the ABC-Post poll, the only public survey of its size this year, was the first recent poll to indicate a significant advantage for either candidate.

The poll's margins of error varied with their differing sample size in each state. ABC did not disclose those margins. Given the size of the overall sample, the sample in individual states and the District of Columbia would average 192, for which the sampling error would be about 10 points.

Dukakis described his debate repertoire in baseball lingo, as well, saying he would use a "fastball, curve, slider — maybe a knuckler" during his 90 minutes on stage.

Workers in Los Angeles erected a debate-night set — wooden lecterns, red carpet and telegenic blue background — that was trucked in from Omaha, where it was used in last week's vice presidential debate. The debate begins at 9 p.m. EDT on the UCLA campus in Los Angeles.

Bush goes into the 90-minute encounter with a modest lead in the public opinion polls. Republican vice presidential candidate Dan Quayle, the subject of anonymous criticism from senior Bush advisers since that debate, said as he set out on his daily campaign rounds that if he finds out who was talking, "I think there will be staff changes."

Administrator runs for office

By LONA J. WOODWARD

The 57th Utah State Legislative District will pit incumbent Republican Christine R. Fox against Democratic candidate Lars E. Jenkins in November's election.

Jenkins was appointed to office last year after the death of her husband, Bill Fox. The 57th District includes Lehi, two-thirds of American Fork and Cedar Fork/Fairfield.

Jenkins, a retired Alpine School District administrator and teacher for 25 years, is campaigning heavily for reelection. "I'm an educator who works in kids," said Jenkins. "The best kept secret in life is education. It is the major reason why America is so great."

Jenkins classifies himself as a "working man" and says this will enable him to better represent the people.

Having a diversified background, she believes she will be able to deal effectively with issues that confront her. "I have more than 25 years of agricultural experience, 10 years of experience with a trucking company in addition to a background in retailing," said Fox. "I am ready to serve the people and give my best judgment based on my experience."

Jenkins does not want to campaign on many issues because he does not believe in making promises that he might not be able to keep. "I don't want to say too much and make promises that will be impossible to keep. . . I will serve the people in terms of the education problem," said Jenkins.

Fox said she has confidence in the school board.

"They are elected to run our schools and I feel that they are doing an excellent job," said Fox. "There will be a need to be innovative in the future as our resources become limited, but that is an issue that will be taken care of when we are faced with it," said Fox.

1988 student voters increase

By PAT BIRKEDAH
Universe Staff Writer

Efforts to register voters have been surprisingly successful in Utah County this year, perhaps signaling an end to the more than two-decade decline in voter participation, election volunteers say.

According to records at the Utah County Elections Office, several organizations are providing opportunities to register eligible voters. Some members of those organizations claim they have had a difficult time obtaining necessary registration materials.

Linda Clark, president of the League of Women Voters, said low voter turnout has a lot to do with the difficulty to register. Mothers with young children find it hard to get to the County Building to register, she said.

The League, which has a registration booth at University Mall, registered approximately 500 voters over the weekend, according to the elections office. Clark said, "I took my registration material down to a fair at my daughter's elementary school and registered 70 people."

The Utah Voter Information Pamphlet, a booklet which was delivered to Utah residents with newspapers over the weekend, gave information on how to register to vote.

Information on registration by mail was incorrect for Utah County. In the County, forms are not available at banks, post offices or libraries. An employee of the Utah County Election Office said the mail-in forms are not available at the post office because the forms are expensive and people just use them for scratch paper.

Robert W. Stringham, Utah County democratic party chairman, who is running against Rep. Howard Nielson for Utah's 3rd Congressional District, said his party office was having a difficult time getting sufficient numbers of forms.

Keith Haines, who will be registering voters at the Utah County Republican Party Office, said the party has ordered 4,000 registration forms from a local printer. He said, "The problem is there is only so much money in the budget for registration . . . and a lot more people are registering to vote than was planned on."

When asked why Utah Valley Community College and BYU were still able to get forms from the election offices, Huish said the organizations picked up forms without the mail-in notation in the corner. "Organizations can get up to 250 forms which they must return. Then they get blank forms back to equal 250 again," Huish said.

Haines said he knew the other forms were available but the local Republican Party preferred the mail-in type for the convenience of some of their volunteers.

Requirements to register to vote in Utah for the Nov. 8 election are that you must be 18 years or older, a U.S. citizen and a resident of Utah for at least 30 days prior to the election.

In addition to special registration at the Mall and on campus which ends Friday, it is also possible to register at the county election office in room 3400 of the new Utah County Building at 100 East Center Street. Registration is also being taken at the Republican Party Office, 235 N. University Avenue, and the Democratic Party Office, 1256 North 500 West in the Riverside Plaza.

October 18 is the closing date for voter registration at all locations in Utah. However, Nov. 1-3, another opportunity to register will take place when neighborhood registration will be conducted.

The Utah Council of Student Body Presidents set a goal to increase student voter participation. In pursuit of the goal, on-campus registration is available to both BYU and UVCC students.

Academic vice president for the Associated Students of Utah Valley Community College, Kris Nossack, said the UVCC student response was much greater than anticipated.

"We had 10 booklets (250 registration forms) and we went through them all in just a few hours without advertising or anything. We just set up a table and students flocked to it."

Joseph Udall, assistant vice president of BYUSA, said, "I knew students were interested, but I have been overwhelmed by the number that actually registered."

BYU tuition is low, spokesman says

By STEFANY POLLAEHNE
Universe Staff Writer

Despite the tuition increase scheduled for fall of 1989, BYU is still "the best buy" in the nation, said a BYU spokesman.

"BYU's tuition costs are ranked among the lowest in the nation for a private university. It is absolutely the best buy in education you can get," said Paul Richards, director of BYU Public Communications.

According to a recent survey by the College Board, the average tuition and fees for a four-year private institution is $7,693 a year or $3,846 per semester. Next fall BYU's yearly tuition will be $1,800.

At Pepperdine University and Boston College, which are church affiliated universities, yearly tuitions are $12,115 and $11,076. Princeton, Yale, Harvard and the University of Chicago all have tuitions above $12,000. The average yearly tuition rate for a four-year public university averages about $1,566.

BYU's scheduled increase would raise student's tuition by 4.65 percent or another $40 per semester.

However, the 4.65 percent increase is lower than the last increase of 6.17 percent.

"No one likes to see tuition go up," said Richards.

However, tuition at BYU has risen every year since 1974 when it was $320 per semester. Tuition increases averaged 6.94 percent or $38 per semester. The largest single increase came in 1981 when tuition went up $65 (13.4 percent) per semester. Richards said the increase came during years of double-digit inflation.

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints subsidizes about two-thirds of BYU's operating costs. When costs rise, students and the Church pay the increases, said Richards.

Operating costs include such things as paying utilities, building projects — such as an addition or a change to a building, replacing old equipment and salary for the faculty and staff, he said.

Richards said, "As long as there are increases in the consumer price index (cost of living expenses) we will always have increases in tuition."

"Tuition across the nation has been increasing at a phenomenal rate; however, an article from a 1987 issue of USA Today said tuition is as affordable today as it was in 1970 because the rate of income is higher."

This means ability to pay tuition is about the same as it was in 1970.

Return on a college education is also greater than in the past, Richards said.

"It's like a long-term business investment. Even though it hurts now, in the long run you are thousands of dollars ahead," he said.

Student achievement award replaces Miss BYU pageant

By ALISA Y. KIM
Universe Staff Writer

The student representative program title "BYU Student Achievement Award," will replace the title "Students of the Year" — which replaced the Miss BYU pageant in July.

A five-member committee has chosen the theme "Pursuing His Path" because "Christ teaches us to try to reach our potential in all areas," said Jennifer Ricahds, chairwoman of the proposed program. "This is what we want our program to exemplify. We know it may be a lofty goal, but we feel these students are putting forth the effort and should be recognized," said Richards, 18, a sophomore from Kearny, Ariz., majoring in political science and public relations.

The committee will also submit a list of proposed judges to the BYUSA Presidency Council. Suggestions include entertainer Jay Osmond and former general president of the Relief Society of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints Barbara Smith.

This program, implemented after the Miss BYU Pageant was discontinued in July, is available to all students regardless of age, race, religion, sex, marital status or grade point average, according to Richards.

Students will be judged in four categories: the application process, an interview, oratorical competition and talent or skill category. Two males and two females will be chosen from 15 to 20 finalists on Nov. 19 at 7 p.m. in the N. Eldon Tanner Building. Students interested can pick up applications on the fourth floor of the Ernest L. Wilkinson Center.

The Professional Grounds Management Society and Landscape Management Magazine have named BYU's grounds manager the Landscape Manager of the Year.

Roy Peterman, head of the Grounds Department at BYU, will accept the national award on Sunday Oct. 23 at a Landscape Exposition in Nashville, Tenn., according to Jerry Roach of Landscape Management Magazine.

The runners up for the award included managers for the grounds of the Biltmore Hotels Corp. and Holy Cross College of Worcester, Mass.

A great honor

"It's a great honor to be chosen by your peers," said Peterman. "I was really honored and somewhat surprised to be considered and asked to submit an application."

Peterman manages 41 full-time employees and 300 student employees. He said, "It would not of been possible without the support of the Board of Trustees at this university and the great employees who do all the work."

Create an atmosphere

Peterman said his goal is to create an atmosphere of learning in the Grounds Department.

He said he wants to create a picture for good in the minds of the students and those who visit the campus.

"We want to help students who work for us learn the importance of work and give them experience they can't get in a classroom," said Peterman.

A lot of the students' work is done in the early morning hours, but most of it is done throughout the day in between class and studies.

According to the BYU Public Communications Office, Peterman joined BYU in 1972 as the sprinkler foreman. He was promoted to his current position as manager of the Grounds Department in 1978.

Expertise in field

His expertise has included assisting with the training of grounds managers of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints facilities throughout the world.

A Master Gardener Training Program developed by Peterman has been recognized nationally as an outstanding model for grounds maintenance training.

He has also been nationally recognized for his innovative design and construction of BYU's football field at Cougar Stadium.

Other awards

This year Peterman received the Urban Forestry Beautification Board Award and the award for outstanding landscaper of Provo.

In 1985 he visited China as a member of a delegation of the U.S. Grounds Administrators.

Peterman graduated from Riverside City College in California with an associate degree in electrical engineering in 1970, and he received a degree in psychology-personal development at BYU in 1972.

He is a recipient of numerous professional training certificates.

Peterman has had several articles published in professional trade magazines and is a frequent guest speaker at professional grounds management conferences throughout the United States.

Peterman will be sent to the National Landscape Exposition in Nashville, Tenn., by Landscape Management Magazine.

Court case may overturn bias ruling

WASHINGTON — As apprehensive civil rights advocates look on, the Supreme Court is hearing arguments that will help it decide whether to overturn a key 1976 decision used to fight racial discrimination.

The justices Wednesday were scheduled to hear arguments on whether they should reverse the 12-year-old ruling that allows people to sue private citizens accused of bias.

Their decision is expected in 1989.

The court sent shock waves through the civil rights community last April when it announced it would explore the issue in a case from North Carolina involving charges of on-the-job racial harassment.

While no party to the North Carolina case urged the court to reconsider the 1976 precedent, the justices by a 5-4 vote took the extraordinary step of acting on their own initiative to call for a reexamination.

The dissenters said the move threatens to undermine the faith minorities have placed in the high court.

The attorneys general of nearly every state, a majority of U.S. senators, a significant minority in the House and more than 100 civil rights and public interest groups are urging the court not to tamper with the 1976 ruling.

In addition to its practical effect, the case is expected to have a major psychological impact and provide a tip-off on the future direction of the court.

Palestinian homes in Israel destroyed

JERUSALEM — Soldiers blew up four Palestinian homes and sealed five others Wednesday in reprisal for the murder of Arabs who collaborated with Israel. Palestinians hurled a grenade at a troop bus but missed.

Noting an increased use of guns and grenades by Palestinian activists, Defense Minister Yitzhak Rabin suggested there had been a shift in Palestinian tactics from stones to more sophisticated weapons.

"Once they shift from civilian violence to terror for me it is proof that they failed to achieve their goals by what they call the intefadeh," Rabin said, using the Arabic word for uprising.

But clashes continued between soldiers and demonstrators in the occupied territories with hospital officials reporting four Palestinians wounded, three of them with plastic bullets.

In the Gaza Strip, sources said a grenade was thrown between a bus carrying soldiers and a civilian car. The army said no injuries resulted, and soldiers sealed the area and detained a number of Palestinians.

International bank named in drug scheme

TAMPA, Fla. — Federal agents gave new meaning to "hostile takeover" by smashing a $32 million global money-laundering ring that routed drug profits through a bank to Colombian cocaine cartels, authorities say.

Customs agents infiltrated Colombia money-laundering syndicates and helped smuggle profits from drug sales out of the country, federal authorities charged Tuesday in a series of indictments naming 85 defendants.

The charges resulted from a two-year investigation dubbed "Operation C Chase." The "C" stands for C-note, slang for $100 bills.

Among the defendants were BCCI Holdings, a Luxembourg-based bank holding company with branches in 72 countries, and nine bank officials.

"It is the first time an entire financial institution and its important members have been indicted," said U.S. Customs Service chief William Von Raab. "We have given new meaning to the term 'hostile takeover.'"

Tuesday's announcement came two days after the arrest here of 11 people, including seven en route to a bogus bachelor party, officials said.

Weapon problems expose 'bad trend'

WASHINGTON — Safety problems that halted production of U.S. nuclear weapons materials expose a "bad trend" and a "sense of complacency" in the operations of nuclear plants, top Energy Department officials said Wednesday.

"The risks we are facing are serious," said Richard Starostecki, deputy assistant energy secretary for safety, health and quality assurance. Energy Secretary John S. Herrington said Tuesday that the government will not be able to manufacture nuclear weapons materials for 2½ months because of safety problems, but he said that raises no threat to national security.

"We're trying to take measures now before the situation does degrade and we have a serious accident," said Starostecki.

Referring to the shutdown last weekend of the main plutonium processing plant at Rocky Flats in Golden, Colo., because of a radioactive contamination incident, he said, "The incident of the workers is indicative of a bad trend and we want to stop it before it does result in any off-site release" of radioactive material.

Robert Redford hit of IAPA conference

SUNDANCE — Robert Redford's pet causes found a starstruck audience in the Inter American Press Association Wednesday as the group bombarded the actor-director with photo requests and personal questions.

An outspoken environmentalist and arts advocate, Redford still managed to address his two favorite concerns during a luncheon session of the IAPA's fall assembly.

Having just returned from a series of campaign appearances on behalf of presidential contender Michael Dukakis, Redford said the Massachusetts governor pledged to make the federal Environmental Protection Agency a cabinet-level department.

"I would elevate it to the same level that economic prosperity and military strength get. The environment should be a matter of national priority," Redford said.

He disputed Republican claims that Dukakis, whom he described as having a pro-environment record in his home state, should be held accountable for the pollution of Boston Harbor.

Chinese disregard policy

'One-child' plan ignored

By HISAYOSHI IWAMITSU
Senior Reporter

China's restrictive "one child" birth control policy has been observed in metropolitan areas but not in the countryside, said an official in the U.S. Commerce Department.

According to Judith Banister, chief of the Chinese Branch in the U.S. Census Bureau, Washington D.C., government control in China is stronger in the city and weaker in the countryside.

"The government can control people's lives in the city because they work for the government, but not in the countryside because farmers do not work for the government anymore," she said.

The Washington Post quoted an article from the People's Daily, the leading Communist Party newspaper, as saying a 54-year-old peasant living outside Beijing has seven children. It concluded that there are thousands of similar cases in the countryside.

Farmers resist the birth control program because they need more farm hands to get the most from their lands, she said.

"The government has very little control over the families," she said.

Ming Deng, 36, a second year graduate student in the BYU Communications Department, from Beijing, said that couples who obey the policy of having only one child are given subsidies (around 5 yuan) from the government until their child becomes 14 years old.

"If, however, a couple violates the policy, the subsidies will be withdrawn, and the couple has to pay back all the money they got from the government," Deng said.

In addition to those penalties, Banister said, when the pregnancy is discovered, the government immediately reduces the salaries of the husband and wife by between 15 percent and 20 percent.

"Their salary is already quite low. So, to reduce their salary is quite serious," she said.

If the couple has an abortion, their salary will rise again, he said.

But if they do not choose to abort, their salary will be continuously reduced for 14 years by the government, said Banister.

Independent Study: For those who can't fit a class they really need into their schedule.

If your schedule for Fall Semester is not working out because you can't get the class you need, take a course through Independent Study.

Independent Study courses are an excellent way to supplement your on-campus schedule:

- They are designed to be equivalent to on-campus classes.
- They are taught by BYU professors.
- They give you the same credit.
- They give you added flexibility.
- You can enroll any time.
- You have a full year to complete each course.

Most BYU departments are represented through Independent Study. You have nearly 300 different courses to choose from.

'Y' training gets top rating

Leadership program receives grant

SHANNON MINEER
Universe Staff Writer

A national foundation recently gave BYU a grant for the specific purpose of training school administrators. The grant of approximately $40,000 was given to BYU from the Danforth Foundation and will be used for the leaders' Preparation Program. The grant is also partially funded by a grant from the U.S. Office of Education, said Ivan Muse, director of the leaders' Preparation Program.

According to Muse, the LPP focuses on the job training in the area of internships. He said that the purpose of the training is for those interested in administrative positions. "We select top educators and offer them a unique, creative and innovative experience," said Muse. "We have a responsibility to produce well-trained, experienced administrators," he said.

Those chosen to participate in the program are selected from the state's teaching ranks, said Muse. They receive a year's leave of absence with partial pay to complete the program.

According to Muse, those selected to participate in the program must have excellent recommendations from the school administration as well as from the university, and five years of teaching experience.

"We select educators who have proven themselves to be outstanding, rather than just looking at their paper work," said Del Wasden, department chairman of Educational Leadership.

"The job of selecting people in this manner will provide the highest probability for success because we know what the participants are like when they come into the program," said Wasden.

Students spend four days per week working directly with a school principal, and the fifth day in class doing course work. They spend the summer, as well, doing course work, said Muse.

"The grant was given to BYU because we are the leaders in training school administrators," said Muse.

The Danforth Foundation also invited BYU to join a university partnership along with 14 other universities, said Wasden.

"The purpose of such a partnership is to develop ways to train teachers and administrators to be more effective; to provide them with better training by offering them more hands-on experience. "The invitation from Danforth Foundation came with the intent to have us share what we have learned about training because we are a leader in this area," said Wasden.

BYU is one of a select groups of universities the foundation is involved with because of their impressive record, said Wasden. Last February, BYU won an award for the Most Outstanding Pre-service Principal Preparation Program in the nation, he said.

Muse said that BYU LPP organizers are planning to broaden the program to include internships with management personnel in both business and industry to provide additional knowledge and experience for students.

Crisis stability is declining

By ELIZA TANNER
Universe Staff Writer

The probability of war between the United States and the Soviet Union in the event of a crisis has become greater with the decline in crisis stability, said the director of the Mer-shon Center at Ohio State University.

Charles F. Hermann, also a political science professor at Ohio State University, said in a speech at BYU Tuesday that the United States and the Soviet Union have been avoiding classic acute military crises in the last few years.

This is despite the fact that both sides have engaged in very provocative actions, said Hermann.

With a background of military confrontations, such as the Cuban missile crisis and the Korean War, people may think that crises are only military.

According to Hermann, however, "the most critical crises of the 1990s will be of a very different character."

These crises may occur in ecology, genetics, energy, food distribution and financial interdependence. Both the United States and the Soviet Union have moved away from stability in the structuring of their military or deterrent forces.

CHARLES F. HERMANN

The nations have changed weapon-system characteristics, mobilization ideas and strategic thinking. A decline in crisis stability is fostered by such widely entertained ideas as "launch from under attack" and "pre-emptive decapitation," which would make a country more likely to resort to military force in a crisis.

As a country considers "launching from under attack," the current weapon systems reduce decision time for a political or military leader to between eight and 11 minutes, thus increasing the probability of bad choices, Hermann said.

The concept of "preemptive decapitation" is based on the possibility by advanced weapons now to be directed at specific corners of buildings.

In real terms this means that in a crisis situation, a country may take preventive action and bomb the most likely places opposition leaders may be found.

Even with the seemingly reduced tensions, "I don't think there is any room in the foreseeable future for trust between the United States and the Soviet Union" concerning military treaty compliance, said Hermann.

Intensive study in Hebrew offered

Jerusalem Center to begin fourth semester program in 1990

By ELIZA TANNER
Universe Staff Writer

Beginning in 1990, the BYU Jerusalem Center will offer an intensive course in modern Hebrew for fourth-semester Hebrew students.

The course is designed to give students the opportunity to benefit linguistically from being in Israel, said M. Deloy Pack, a professor of Hebrew in the department of Asian and Near Eastern languages at BYU.

Students must have completed three semesters of modern Hebrew in order to participate in the program. Students may fulfill this requirement and enter the program in 1990.

A special section of Hebrew 101 will be offered daily during Winter Semester 1989 at noon. This class will be followed with Hebrew 102, Spring Term.

As the Hebrew 101 class is not in the Winter class schedule, students may contact Pack for more information.

Many students go to the BYU Jerusalem Center with little or no background in Hebrew, said Pack. "Consequently they cannot benefit significantly from their contact with Hebrew speakers in the country."

Currently at the BYU Jerusalem Center, students who participate in the Travel Study program may take a one credit introductory course in Hebrew. This will change with the beginning of the new six-month Hebrew course, said Pack.

Course work in modern Hebrew will be built around radio, newspapers, television and on-the-street communication, said Pack.

All of the activities will be geared toward helping students function more effectively in Israel.

Author refutes revisionists

By ALAN K. BAILEY
Asst. Campus Editor

An expert on the Jewish Holocaust will speak today in the Varsity Theatre in the Ernest L. Wilkinson Center at 11 a.m. and again on Friday at 10 a.m. in F201 HFAC.

Deborah Lipstadt, former director of the Brandeis Bardine Institute in Los Angeles and author of the book: "Beyond Belief: The American press and the Coming of the Holocaust, 1933-1945," will speak on Holocaust revisionists, or people that claim that the Holocaust either never happened or was not an important occurrence in history.

"My fear is that people will qualify the Holocaust and bring it down to an everyday occurrence," said Lipstadt.

Lipstadt, a part-time faculty member at Occidental College, felt that she could either ignore the revisionists or study and expose their theories. She chose the latter and is writing a book on the subject.

In July, she presented a paper on the Holocaust at the international Holocaust conference at Oxford University in England.

Lipstadt spent several years in Israel and became intensely interested in modern Jewish history. She later obtained a Ph.D. in Jewish history at Brandeis University.

She has recently returned from the Soviet Union where she conducted a teaching tour to refuseniks, Jews who have been denied visas to emigrate.

Chilean people want democracy

For more than 15 years Chile was ruled with an iron hand by the dictator Augusto Pinochet. He superceded democracy and routinely used the Armed Forces to impose his will on the South American nation.

It isn't surprising that last week when Pinochet attempted to legitimize his regime and allow Chileans to decide whether his rule should be extended until 1997, the populace sent the general a message of "no mas."

Yet apparently the Chilean regime did not anticipate the defeat and the rejection came as a tremendous shock. Ashen-faced government officials greeted the press in the moments following the vote count with a terse concession. Although there has been no evidence of vote fraud, the government has hardly acted as good sports.

Since the election results, government troops have beaten and fired upon citizens participating in spontaneous victory celebrations and international journalists covering the oppressive acts have not been immune to the abuse. Several were beaten by soldiers and required medical care. The U.S. government has responded with an official protest to Chilean authorities.

Before the brutal 1973 coup that toppled elected president Salvador Allende, Chile had been the South American model for democracy.

It had survived totalitarian attempts on its system for 150 years preceding the Pinochet coup. What is happening today in Chile is a struggle between an entrenched regime who doesn't want to give up total power and a general electorate that will not stand for another eight years without elections.

Deep wounds exist between the Chilean left and right. They stem from the dark months following the 1973 coup when tens of thousands Chilean activists were imprisoned, tortured and murdered by government police.

Although Pinochet has had success in making Chile's economic system a model for South America, the gap between the rich and poor has increased. The determining factor in the Chilean plebiscite was how the middle class would vote. They responded with a "no" vote and Pinochet was out.

Despite the plebiscite results, Pinochet still intends to remain in power until the 1990 election and has the right to remain head of the Chilean Armed Forces until 1995.

And there is no assurance that a clone of Pinochet will not be elected in Chile's next presidential race.

In order to deny Pinochet additional years of power, 16 groups with varying political ideas formed a shaky alliance to win the plebiscite. It is doubtful that the same groups could unify on a single candidate.

Chile's regime did garner 44 percent of plebiscite approval, and no other man in Chile can claim that amount of popular support.

The Daily Universe applauds the Chilean people for being willing to risk possible political instability in order to achieve democracy. Chileans are demonstrating a remarkable amount of courage in resisting the bullying tactics of the aging regime.

The world needs to stay aware of this struggle for democracy and keep the pressure on so the military will not dare renege on their promises to open up the political process.

By the same token, the political process in Chile should not rush itself and seek an "anybody but Pinochet" solution. The goal for Chile is democracy, not just another new face. After dictator Anastasio Somoza was overthrown in Nicaragua, too much was done in haste and a small group of Marxist rebels called "Sandinistas" were allowed to assume power. Without popular support, they have destroyed an economy and now assume a dictatorial control that Somoza never accomplished.

It would be a tragedy if the current right-wing authoritarian Chilean regime was in the future replaced by a left-wing totalitarian regime.

Health care plans necessary for all

The cost of medical care in the United States has leaped more than 200 percent since the early 1960s and the future does not look good.

The greatest increases have been in the cost of hospital care.

Reasons for the increases included the installation of expensive new equipment and large pay raises granted by hospitals to their employees. In order to cover these expenses, hospitals raised their service charges by more than 150 percent between 1960 and 1970.

While about 80 percent of all Americans have some type of private health insurance, there are more than 35 million U.S. citizens who have no type of private health care coverage.

This could be interpreted to mean that if one of these Americans, for some reason, is in need of medical attention, there is a distinct possibility that it will be denied to him or her. Many of these citizens cannot afford medical insurance and therefore, cannot afford medical treatment.

As people that claim to have high moral and political values, a nation that is for the people, it is our responsibility to provide a way for every American to be able to receive medical care when it is needed.

Medical care can become more accessible by implementing a health insurance plan. It would be one that would require participation from individuals, employers and governmental aid.

For the most part this plan would mandate that employers provide medical insurance for their employees, with some aid from the government where necessary, and a minimal charge to employees.

This type of plan would ensure employees of the benefits they deserve and help in the effort to provide all Americans with the health care they need.

This type of program is parallel to the one proposed by presidential candidate Michael Dukakis.

It would be completely separate from Medicaid and Medicare, two of the nation's programs designed to aid the elderly and disabled.

We are perhaps the world's most technologically advanced nation. We can store phenomenal amounts of information on a microchip. We can send men to space in a shuttle and communicate with them through means of video and audio. And we have the power to blow up the entire planet several times over.

If we can do all this, we should also be able to provide every American with the needed health care. By implementing this type of plan we would be taking a step toward making this goal more of a reality and less of an illusion.

Utah Symphony means more than paycheck

The strike is over and the Utah Symphony is back. For at least three more years, they say, but does anyone really care?

In the past few years, the symphony has done much to reach Utahns and there is a lot of people can do to support the orchestra which has brought such fame and prestige to the Intermountain West.

The reasons behind the strike, though, are a little discomfiting. Do symphony musicians play just for the salary or is there really just as great an excitement performing the music as many people get while listening to it?

A friend went to Staten Island in New York City this summer to see the New York Philharmonic, one of her lifetime dreams. As a musician, she wanted to see a performance by one of the finest orchestras in the world.

She said the concert was musical, but there was no life. The musicians just played the notes. The members of the orchestra seemed bored and unenthused about showing any kind of excitement while playing, which is entirely impossible while performing something like the "1812 Overture" by Tchaikovsky.

She returned somewhat disappointed from the musicians' lack of rapport with the audience and thinking twice about the career she has chosen.

Happily, musicians from the Utah Symphony don't seem to fall into this category. They seem to play for the enjoyment and inner satisfaction of the performance.

Recently the symphony went out of its way to make itself more "accessible" to the vulgate. This past summer, the concert series at Snowbird Ski Resort was advertised with slogans like "Relax with Rossini," "Stretch out with Stravinsky" and other such invitations.

Furthermore, concert listeners were encouraged to come dressed as casually as possible — in shorts, visors and sunglasses. Regular season concert-goers undoubtedly cringed, yet probably went anyway and enjoyed themselves.

The approximately 95-piece orchestra offers greatly discounted tickets to students. It hosted a community dance after a concert this summer. It has a midnight concert and party each year on New Year's Eve. It offers discussions and, each year, gives youth in the state a chance to be accompanied by a professional symphony in its "Salute to Youth."

Math 110 has had some revision

Ronald D. Jamison is the director for Math 110-111.

Because of two recent letters to the editor about Math 110, it seems appropriate, as the present director of the program, to respond. The criticisms were directed mostly toward our examinations. Because of the large number of students who take the exams, we are constrained to a multiple-choice format. We must have a large pool of questions and be able to generate quickly several different versions of the examinations in order to work in the Testing Center environment.

Since becoming director of the program in 1987, I have examined and reformulated many of the questions in our test pool. We have limited the multiple-choice options to four in order to simplify the tests. To assure that the problems selected for the exams were relevant to the material presented in class, approximately 95 percent of the problems selected for the pool were a direct match with the problems found in the section exercises of the text being used. We have engaged the services of three publishing companies to assist us in developing a computerized test generation program so that we can now generate large numbers of equally weighted, but unique exams.

We have been carefully monitoring the performance of students on these exams for the past year. During Winter Semester 1988, 550 students (44 percent) received A or B grades in the course, while 13 percent of those who completed the course received an E/WE grade.

Students who successfully complete Math 110 and move to Math 111 take similarly formatted examinations.

In Math 111 only 4.6 percent of the students completing the course in Winter 1988 received a grade better than WE. Of course, the students in Math 111 are a selected subset of those who took Math 110 and are continuing their study of mathematics with the benefit of the immediate prerequisite study in Math 110.

It has been found at major institutions nationally that often from third to half, or more, of students taking this course are unsuccessful. We do quite well by comparison. We are not satisfied. We are committed to continued improvement and welcome any suggestions that may come in our continuing efforts to prove and strengthen our testing program.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Choices

Dear Editor:

It's interesting to watch the democratic camp exploit George Bush's choice for a vice presidential running mate. They call Bush's choice purely political. My response is "He who is without sin..."

I would have a hard time classifying any of the last few vice presidential choices as anything but political. Pres. Reagan chose Bush because he wanted to ensure the Texas vote. If Geraldine Ferraro was not a political choice then one doesn't exist. I will grant that Dan Quayle was chosen to attract votes from the younger crowd and from women. But is Lloyd Bentsen any less a political choice than these others? What did anyone in mainstream America know about Lloyd Bentsen?

The Democrats will tell you that Dukakis chose Bentsen because they don't think the same on all the issues. I don't buy it. I believe Bentsen was chosen because Dukakis wanted to defeat Bush in a state that counts for a lot of electoral votes.

Quayle may have been a political choice, but Dukakis and Bentsen are the last people who should be casting stones.

David A. Colvin
Detroit, Mich.

Dear Editor:

Does it strike anyone else as strange that for the upcoming Winter Semester there are only two days off with absolutely no spring break? For a student raised on college movies this struck me as a bit strange. Breaks during school are good for the students. It gives us time to rest, become rejuvenated and to get caught up on all of the work we've put off. Breaks allow us to get back into the swing of life. Do we not have a spring break because of the bad reputation that generally follows them? As students of BYU, sworn to our honor codes and a lifestyle we choose, that should be no problem.

Is there no spring break so we'll finish school earlier? This makes a bit more sense. We should, however, get at least a day or two off for Easter to rest or spend the time with families and friends. It is, after all, a religious holiday, one traditionally to be spent with the family, and this is a religiously based school. It would seem logical to get a few days off.

Spring break is a time of invigoration; a time to get excited about life again. We should have a spring break. Why don't we?

Beth Saunders
Pocatello, Idaho

They smile!

Dear Editor:

There have been so many complaints lately about the dress code, the Bookstore, and other trivial things, that I'd like to point out a more positive look at our campus. You may not have noticed, but the people on this campus are some of the most warm and friendly people I've ever met. They smile!

Even if they don't know you, they smile. I've lived in several different places, including overseas, and you just don't see that anymore. No one bothers to get to know anyone else. Here at BYU, however, it's different.

Everyone here takes the time to get to know other people, even after they've found a group to hang around with. They smile and say, "Hi, what's your name?", while waiting in line at the Bookstore or while walking back and forth between classes. I wish everyone could realize just how lucky we are to have this warmth and love surrounding us every day. Don't take it for granted! When someone smiles at you, smile back! It makes the day seem much brighter, and as you care about others, you lose sight of your own problems and feel better about yourself. So get out there and smile!

Heidi Shaw
Leavenworth, Kan.

Littering

Dear Editor:

This Saturday's Homecoming football game was a sports spectacular. It included a close first half and then the customary "and they came to pass" type of game in the second half. The halftime show was entertaining and I along with most people was proud of our Olympian alumni, etc. There was an almost Olympic fanfare about it as the band played and people marched. There were also the most blue and white helium-filled balloons I have ever seen released in my lifetime.

I watched the balloons float out of the stadium and wondered out of curiosity where they would all end up. Would they all float northeast to Wyoming as a message from BYU that "we'll be back"? Maybe they would float to some poor rancher's pasture to be mowed at by his bored cows. To my horror I realized that they were probably destined to be now synthetic meadows in the scenic mountains and meadows east of Provo that I have often explored with passion. I consulted with one of this school's environmental engineering professors about the future of these plastic ambassadors. He said that they may exist in the environment for up to 100 years before decomposing. I'm afraid that many of us believe that since this earth will one day be cleansed by fire that we have no responsibility to care for it.

Was not Adam commanded in the garden of Eden "to dress it and keep it"? We should likewise be more aware of what effect our actions have on the environment around us. Perhaps I sound like an environmentalist Samuel the Lamanite preaching the salvation of the wilderness from the stadium walls, but I pray that our half-time activities planners think twice next time and not make this litter project a Homecoming tradition.

Bill Baranowski
Provo

Illogical

Dear Editor:

I am rather alarmed at the nation's gullibility in believing George Bush's outrageous statements about Gov. Michael Dukakis. Mudslinging is, unfortunately, now part of the electoral process, and while Bush certainly does not hold a monopoly on the current batch of mud that is swirling around, it seems he's doing a lot of making it stick.

Specifically, Bush's comment that Dukakis should be held accountable for the debacle of Willie Horton is obviously stuck because the entire essence of Sunday's debate, and apparently the whole nation, erupted in laughter when Dukakis said his was tough on crime.

Although the facts of the Massachusetts' furlough program are in the public record, it seems that there need to be made public again. First of all, every state has a furlough program, and over 33 states have programs for convicted criminals such as Willie Horton. Secondly, the program in question was not started by Dukakis but by a Republican governor that preceded him. The program was then continued through the term of the Democratic successor Gov. King to the term of Gov. Dukakis. Throughout all these years, Willie Horton has the belief only mishap, after which the program was promptly stopped.

Our readiness to believe in sensational accusations only shows us as a nation of sheep, although how can we conceive of Bush as a shepherd beyond me.

Joseph Quinn

Skirts aside

Dear Editor:

We, the force of working women on campus, breathe a sigh of relief at the fling aside skirts, pantyhose and stockings and don our "dressy pantsuits" again.

I think it was about 1979 that Pres. Dallin H. Oaks altered the dress policy to allow BYU's women to wear pants for six months out of the year. But whether a year, long or only half a year makes no difference to many of us pants-wearing despisers.

I do not think that nice pants and blouses are unacceptable attire for a day's offices — whether at BYU or not. Though there are many advantages and benefits to working out of the pants, I consider this outdated policy a chauvinistic insult. Let's get out of the dark ages.

(By the way, does anyone know where I can find a "dressy pantsuit"? I haven't seen one since the early 1970s.)

Arizona wins golf tournament; Cougar linksters take seventh

AURIE PATTERSON
Sports Writer

The University of Arizona took the championship trophy at the Edean Invitational women's golf tournament held Oct. 10-12 in Seatonsville, Wash. The Cougars finished second place, 14 strokes behind Stanford at 945. Wyoming was third at 946, followed by the United States International University at 948, New Mexico State at 949 and California State Long Beach at 952. The Cougars placed seventh with 960 strokes for three rounds on the par-72 course. BYU Coach Gary Howard said, "We needed this tournament. It was a good experience. We couldn't really win what we need to work on." The Cougars were seventh after the first round Monday and climbed to sixth position Tuesday. Howard said after Monday's round, "The Cougars played well enough on the front to be tied with the two teams ahead of us. If we had played up to our level on the back nine we could have won."

BYU's top players, juniors Mary Grace Estueta and Paula Suarez had their worst finish on Wednesday, both taking quadruple-bogeys on the back nine. Estueta placed seventh in the tournament shooting 76-77-78, for a 231. Suarez shot 80-75-84, for a 239. First and second individual finishers were Kathryn Imrie of Arizona, finishing with a five-over par 221, and Martha Koch, also of Arizona, with a 225. Howard said, "I'm not too disappointed, it could have gone either way. Several of the teams have played one more tournament than we have and most are further along the experience ladder." Other BYU finishers were freshmen Ruby Chico at 244, Susan Power at 246 and junior Lachell Simmons at 252. This was the second tournament for the Cougars at the 6,017 yd. Sahalee Country Club in Redmond, Wash. The Cougars will remain idle until Nov. 9 when they will play in the United States International University Invitational in San Diego.

Miami still No. 1; to face Irish

Daily Universe top 20 poll

By TOM E. NORMAN
Sports Editor

After a one-week absence, the BYU/Daily Universe top 20 poll returns with Miami still in the top position. The Hurricanes, which received 16 first-place votes, were idle this past weekend. UCLA and USC were No. 2 and 3, respectively, both receiving two votes for the top spot. The Bruins beat Oregon State while the Trojans hammered Oregon. Climbing one spot to No. 4 is Notre Dame after its weekend victory over Pittsburgh. The Fighting Irish will square off this week against the top-ranked Hurricanes. There is a good chance that the winner could end up No. 1 at the end of the season. Florida State rounded out the top five, having climbed steadily since falling to Miami in its season opener. The poll does not represent the opinion of Brigham Young University or The Daily Universe. It represents only the opinion of those contributing and is open to any BYU student or staff member.

Total points listed at right and first-place votes in parentheses.

Dodgers advance to World Series

The Los Angeles Dodgers exploded with five runs in the second inning, and Steve Sax pitched a five-hit shutout to give the Dodgers a 6-0 victory and their first National League pennant since 1981, Wednesday in Los Angeles.

The Dodgers jumped all over losing pitcher Ron Darling in the second inning, scoring five runs to round out the scoring for the game. Mike Scioscia, Jeff Hamilton and Alfredo Griffin started the second inning with three consecutive singles to load the bases for Hershisier. Hershisier's grounder to Gregg Jefferies at third was bobbled. Hershisier beat out the throw and Scioscia scored. Steve Sax's single then scored Hamilton and Griffin. The Mets brought in Dwight Gooden out of the bullpen in relief. After Mickey Hatcher's ground out and an intentional walk to Kirk Gibson, Mike Marshall hit what looked to be an inning-ending double-play ball, but Wally Backman's throw sailed too high and shortstop Kevin Elster was unable to make the play. This scored Hershisier from third. John Shelby's sacrifice fly scored Sax.

How to make a hit.

The American Express® Card is a hit virtually anywhere you shop, from Los Angeles to London. Whether you're buying books, baseball tickets or brunch. So during college and after, it's the perfect way to pay for just about everything you'll want.

How to get the Card now. College is the first sign of success. And because we believe in your potential, we've made it easier for students of this school to get the American Express Card right now—even without a job or a credit history. So whether you're an underclassman, senior or grad student, look into our automatic approval offers. For details pick up an application on campus. Or call 1-800-THE-CARD and ask for a student application.

The American Express Card. Don't Leave School Without It.™

HARDCORE SOFTWARE

Stop fooling around. It's time to get hardcore about software. With Microsoft.

We'll give you all the resources you want. Tens of millions in R&D funding. Along with one of the most elementary tools for thinking — a door, which leads to your own private office. All backed by management that truly does speak your language, because they probably helped write it.

We're serious about software design and testing. If you are too, then sign up for an on-campus interview.

Software Design Engineers

Microsoft designs, develops and implements Applications and Systems software for microcomputers. Areas include networking, sophisticated graphical interfaces, operating systems, compilers, powerful business applications, and CD-ROM — an important breakthrough in information storage and retrieval.

Software Tester

Work as a team with our software developers to release first-class products. Identify strengths and weaknesses in future software and take responsibility for making necessary changes. Design and develop test applications to test systems software at the API level. Design, execute, and document test suites, generate test scripts, and conduct real world environment testing for our applications software.

Program Managers

Instant responsibility. You select the features, you shape the product, you design the user interface for new generations of software. Guide product development from programming through documentation and testing. Keep your product at the forefront of technology by knowing your competition and product trends.

Microsoft offers you an opportunity to live and work where the quality of life is high and the cost of living is low — the beautiful Pacific Northwest. Along with amenities such as a health club membership, workout facilities and parcourse, plus an array of benefits.

Microsoft will be interviewing on campus Friday, November 4 for Software Design Engineers, Program Managers, and Software Testers. We will also interview at this time for summer Software Design Engineer and Program Manager positions. See your placement office for details. We are an equal opportunity employer.

Road race to benefit Springville woman

By MICHELLE F. CLAWSON
Universe Staff Writer

Funds from an upcoming 5K road race will go toward the purchase of a motorized wheelchair for a paraplegic Springville woman.

The "Run for One" 5K race classic is sponsored by two local wards of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints to assist the paraplegic woman.

Anne Heaston, the publicity committee director, said the 32-year old woman, who requests anonymity, lives with her mother in a trailer.

Five years ago the woman was hit by a car, leaving her arms and legs paralyzed, said Heaston. She "impressed the (Latter-day Saint) kids" when talking to them at a fireside.

Using her shoulders, the woman can slightly use her arms enough to work a computer, said Evelyn Thorup, the co-chairperson for the "Run for One" committee.

According to Thorup, the paraplegic woman has a real desire to learn and to keep progressing.

She said the woman recently completed an award-winning afghan by placing large needles under her armpits.

According to Thorup, the woman does not qualify for state help. "She gets enough money which disqualifies her, yet not enough money to really help," said Thorup.

Thorup said the goal of the 5K race is to raise enough money to purchase an electric wheelchair enabling her to "get back to school" and get specialized training in computers.

The 5K race will be Oct. 22 at 9:30 a.m., at 1900 N. 1500 East in Provo. Pre-race registration must be completed by Oct. 17. Race-day registration will begin at 8:30 a.m.

For more information contact Evelyn Thorup at 377-8713 or Gary Watts at 374-1447.
